For the record, I tend to love this conference and this year was no exception. It is organized by people I respect, draws focused talent from a broad range of specializations, and I am invariably able to touch base with well-loved colleagues past/present/future. I have also found that ACRL seems to coincide with and/or create significant milestones in my working life, providing a convenient excuse to reflect at two-year intervals on the professional route I and others have taken, and how we view ourselves in relation to the field.

More thoughts on this front below, but (first things first) here are the decks and audio for three collaborative presentations I gave at ACRL 2013:

* The fight for women's rights progressed in the 19th century in Europe, the U.S, canada, & many other places * Although there were some women-based societies, men were dominate in most places, and still are to this day * In some societies, honor killings take place. These are murders of females in a family by male relatives after the woman does something a family thinks is dishonorable. * many women's rights advocates have focused on legal changes, but changing the law also means changing social norms in some societies. The united Nations millennium goals were set up to eliminate gender discrimination. There are also women's rights groups & in some countries theres even a holiday set up to honor women	* This is when women started to gain voting rights along with other economic rights * Even though women have gained many rights over time, this shows that most men are still looked at as the dominate. * This shows the superiority of men in those societies. The article mentioned that although it was against the law, honor killings were often ignored. *men are so used to looking down apon women in places such as Africa + Iraq that they have difficulty + are often times unwilling to change. * This shows that even though women are looked apon as unequals, there are some solutions taking place around the world	* why have women in America gained more rights than those in other countries? * Why is it so difficult for men in some societies to treat women with equality?

What We Want To Learn

We would like to learn of the psychological recovery of a war amputee, and how their families play a role in their recovery. We would like to learn of more advancing technologies that will increase knowledge and provide surgical help during an amputation. We also want to know what the different causes of amputations are. What disadvantages does an amputation put on the human body? What infections can come from a recent amputation?

Our Initial List of Questions We Have About Our Topic

1. What are the different parts of a prosthetic limb?

2. What medical advances have been made for prosthetic limbs since the 21

3. How do amputations affect the families of the amputees?

Although there is much to discover about traumatic brain injuries in Iraq and Afghanistan veterans, a multitude of current solutions are being discovered every single day to not only cure t cope and thrive to the best of their abilities with this devastating injury. One of the many current solutions available to veterans with traumatic brain injuries is a free educational conferen

THE SECRET LIFE OF AN U.S. SOLDIER: ADDICTED

U.S. Soldier Addiction Journal Project

June 10, 2011

Posted in U.S. Soldier Addiction on April 28, 2011 by Ashley P.

Today has been one of the greatest days I have had in a very long time. The Virtual Reality Therapy has completely cured me of my addiction. I never have cravings for my pain medication nor antidepressants. If you are experiencing some type of addiction, I highly recommend you try out this form of therapy. The skills that Carolyn as taught me over the past couple of months have helped me deal with my pain in healthier ways and diminish my reliance on my prescriptions.

After being released from my final therapy session, I called up my old troop's general and all of my friends still in Afghanistan to tell him the good news. They were all overjoyed to hear about my improvement, and it was great talking to them again. For the first time in almost a year, I could talk to them from home without feeling depressed or anxious. Our general told me that he talked to the military officials, and I will not be deployed again. I am so thankful for this because if I was deployed again, there would be a very good chance of regaining my bad habits. My family was also thrilled to hear I will be staying at home with them from now on.

Since I have been home, I have gotten my life back on track. I needed something to do while in therapy, so I got a job as a journalist at a

Video Interview: The Importance of Choice for Igniting Student Passion and Learning Through Research Projects

posted in Media 21, Participatory Librarianship and Learning by The Unquiet Librarian

Earlier this week, I ran a short feature on our art gallery inspired by student research. In the video below, Teagan takes a few minutes to discuss her work and the importance of choice in igniting student passion in research/inquiry projects.

Media 21 Students Use Google Docs Discussions for Networked Learning During Presearch

Posted on March 22, 2011 by The Unquiet Librarian

Last Thursday, I showed our Media 21 students the new "discussions" feature in Google Docs since we've been using Google Docs extensively for collaborative writing and document sharing since last August. After I introduced our presearching graphic organizer at the beginning of class today, one of our students decided to use the discussions feature with two of her classmates during presearch time today to share and discuss resources they were finding through the research pathfinder (accessible from our Media 21 Symbaloo webmixthat students have pulled into their Symbaloo information dashboards). Sydney and her two classmates were demonstrating AASL Standard for 21st Century Learners 3.1.2, "Participate and collaborate as members of a social and intellectual network of learners" as they not only shared information sources, but also as they also used the discussion feature in their shared Google Document to have a conversation about the information they were finding in their sources.

I was so impressed by how Sydney applied the sharing skill in a new information seeking context that I asked her to share with others how she went about this task, and she graciously agreed to tell us about her brainstorm!

"The future of ~~school~~ libraries and ~~school~~ librarians hangs in the balance. But the final decision cannot be made by administrators or school boards alone. It must be shaped and made by librarians in concert with, and frankly, at times in opposition to those who hold power in our schools. We must shape the future not to save ourselves, our jobs, or some sense of tradition.
